for which he was breveted captain and major. He had already been promoted on February 22: 181; to the runk of first lieutenant. He came out of the Mexican War covered with honors and suffering somewhat from a wound which he received at the storming of Chappitepec September 8, 184; during the assault on the fortified convent.

His most service was as adjutant of the Eighth Infantry from June 8, 1847, till uly 1, 1849. After that he was engaged on frontier and garrison duty, chiefly in Texas, till 1878. He was made a captain December 7, 1852, and was appointed paymaster July 16, 1835. When the South seceeded, his sympathies being Southern, he resigned his commission in the United States army, his resignation taking effect June 1, 1861. He was at once commissioned brigadier-general in the Confederate army, and commanded a brigade on the first of the Confederate line at the first battle of Bull Run. There he held at bay a large force of Federal froops which was endesvering to support McDowell's flank attack. Having been made a majorgeneral in the meantime, he commanded the rear guard when General Joseph E. Johnston retreated before McClellan at Yorktown. May 5, 1862, he made a stand at Williamsburg, and was fiercely attacked by Heintzelman, Hooker and Mcarny. It was not until his opponents were reinforced by Hancock that he was driven back into his works. He was enfished in the Seven Days' battles around Richmond, and took part in the second battle of Bull Run, being in command of the Frat Corps of the Army of Northern Myrginia.

During this engagement, Jackson being hard pressed by Pope's army, Longstreet caume to his reilef, and by a determined charge in flank decided the issue of the dray. He held the Confederate left in Fredericksburg, where he conducted himself with signal ganiantry, rie was detached with two of his divisions for service south of James River in 1823, and when Hooker made the movement which he dattle of the Army of Northern Virginia. Longstreet's Quarrel With Hill.

During the Virginia campaign General lengstreet and General A. P. Hill came hear fighting a duel over the battle of Gaines' Mill. It has been generally received that the battle in guestion was fought and won almost exclusively by Lengstreet's Georgia soldiers, but the Richmond Examiner, in an elaborate account of the engagement, gave all the credit to A. P. Hill, who was also in the fight, had written the account himself and gove no credit whatever to the Gorgia general or his men. Longstreet's stiention was called to the matter by his sidutant, who protested vigorously and yes supported in his protest by all the afficers and men of Longstreet's command. The latter directed the adjutant to reply to the obnoxious article through the columns of the same paper, and Hill on reading the reply wrote to the editor.

demanding the name of the man who had dared to stamp his article as false. Hill's letter was referred by the editor to Longstreet, who indorsed it in his own hand to the effect that he himself was the offender. A challenge from Hill to Longstreet followed at once and was grickly accepted. All the arrangements for the encounter had been made when General Lee was informed of the state of affairs. He promptly interfered and told Longstreet that unless he desisted he should be deprived of his command and sent away from the army, Longstreet replied that he could not withdraw his acceptance unless the challenge should first be withdrawn. Lee managed to bring this about and the fight was then cyclared off. c. clared off.

Longstreet and Grant.

Longstreet and Grant.

When the war was over, General Longstreet became a Republican and took up his residence in New Orleans, where he engaged in business as a member of the firm of Longstreet, Owens & Co. General Grant, when President, appointed Longstreet surveyor of customs of the port of New Orleans, President Hayes appointed him supervisor of internal revenue in Louisiana, postmaster of New Orleans and United States minister to Turkey and I resident Garifield made him United States marshal for the district of Georgia.

There was much surprise expressed in seme quarters when Longstreet was first

When the Fourth Regiment was ordered to Louisiana to form a part of the army for observation, and when it formed part of the army of occupation at Corpus Chrisu, Tex., the two leaves the mants were still together and became fast and firm friends. Laring the Mostran war they were separated and say little of each other for some years, in 1878, when Longstreet was in St. Louis for a few days, and Grant was then out of the service, they met again, Grant heard that Longstreet was in town and hunted him up for the purpose of paying time 5° which he hed leave to his few days, which he hed leave to his few days and all the purpose of Good Parentage Needs a Home.

Longstreet used to finish this story somewhat as follows: "I peremptorly declined to take the money, telling Grant that he was out of the service and needed it much more than I. You must take it, said Grant. I can't live with anything in my possession that ian't mine: I have he was in dead carnest, and to save him he was in dead earnest, and to save simmort floation took the money, and shaking hands we parted. The next time we met was at Appomattox." Longstreet continued, "and the first thing Grant said to me whon he had drawn me to one side and shaken hands, was. Peterall my best friends used to call me Feterall my best friends used to call me feteral the pleasant days in Texas."

In 1825 Longstreet had occasion to visit Washington on business, and while there made a call of courtesy on General Grant at his office. In the evening he accepted an invitation to make a visit at the forms.

and had on hope of getting it, and said so, but Grant assured him he would arrange it. A short time later the jupers were made out, and Longstreet was relieved of all political disability. Longstreet's nomination to be surveyor of the port of New Orleans was seat to the senate by Prosident Grant very shortly after his first linauguration. There was considerable opposition to his confirmation by the Senate, and Longstreet offered to retire and thus relieve Grant of emharmasment, Grant's reply was: "No you won't. Those fellows all want offce from me, and not one will get there until you are confirmed. In 1878 he took up his residence in Georgia, and in 1880 was sent as minister to Turkey, where he remained until 1881. He was subsequently United States marshal for the Northern District of Georgia and later National Railroad Commissioner.

The Warrior at Rest.

Longstreet's last home was a quiet faim house sinding on the summit of a mountain ridge in North Georgia, overlocking the valley of the Chattahocchee. The ground descends very rapidly in front of the house, and from the doorstop one may look down upon the tree tops. For inlies and miles a restless sea of green structures before the sight. A correspondent who went up to this quiet spot to est upon the general describes his visit something like this:

"The large double doors at the front of the house stood half open. There was no bell, so I knocked. There was no response, and I caught sound of a snore. Then I knocked again. Still there was no response, and I caught sound of a snore. Then I knocked again, but the more I knocked the louder did the snorer snore. Then I put all my strength into one terrific crash against the door. There was a sudden sound as of one awaking inside the house, and Lee's old warhorse came down the half to meet me. He was dressed for comfort. He did not care that his colvir was nwry; that his alpace coat was ripped up the back. He did not care that his slippers wen flap flap against his heels as he walked. I did not care, either. Nobody here to-day but me, said the old warrior, as he showed me into the library, where he had been sleeping on the lounge. A long talk about the Civil War followed, and Longstreet got out his Confederate uniform and showed it with pride."

Longstreed's fortune was rather small, but he lived comfortably during his later years, dividing his time between his vine-yard and various writings—all about the wat, of course—in which he took great delight.

It is my experience as a specialist of thirty years. In the book I tell how at last I found a way to reach difficult, deep-scatted diseases. Thirty years of carnest, ardent tell in hospitals and at bedsides, made it possible for me to write these books.

The books tell how I perfected my prescription—Dr. Shoop's Restorative, How by scientific experiment I traced out the causes that bring on chronic diseases.

I found invariably that where there was a weakness, the inside nerves were weak. Where there was a lack of vitality, the vital nerves lacked power, where weak organs were found. I always found weak nerves. Not the nerves commonly thought of, but the vital organs' nerves. The inside—the invisible nerves.

nerves commonly thought of, but the vital organs' nerves. The insurvisible nerves.

This was a revelation. Then my real success began. Then I combined ingredients that would strengthen, that would vitalize, these nerves.

That prescription I called a restorative. It is known the world over now as Dr. Shoop's Restorative. After that I did not fail to cure one case in such fundred. In the extremely difficult cases, my fallures for five years were one in each forty treated. I found cancer incurable. Cancer is for surgery—not medicine.

Then how to get this prescription to the sick ones overywhere was my thought. I must announce it in the public press. But, thought I, will they realize the real if yuth of my discovery, the real power of Dr. L. gop's Restorative? Then a way came to me—like an inspiration. "I will offer it to the sick on trial." Then they will known I am sincere—that my prescription is unusual.
